In Swing Low: A Life, Miriam Toews imagines herself into her father's head, and brings him back to life as a narrative 'I.' Her imaginative accomplishment is all the more remarkable in that her father suffered from bipolar disease throughout his life, and eventually his depression became so deep and his mind so confused that that he committed suicide by stepping in front of a train. Such a

In Swing Low, his daughter Miriam recounts Mel's life as she imagines he would have told it, right up to the day he took his final walk. A gracefully written and compassionate recounting of a man's battle with depression in a small Mennonite community, Swing Low is a moving meditation on illness, family, faith and love.

I've reviewed two of Miriam Toews novels, All My Puny Sorrows and A Complicated Kindness; Swing Low: A Life is a biography of her father, written from his point of view.
He was a Mennonite, a manic depressive, and ultimately committed suicide, a fact which lead Toews to write about mental illness in her fiction.

Toews, whose 1998 novel A Boy of Good Breeding was sweet and funny and undercelebrated, tells us all this in her prologue to Swing Low. She tells of the two words he whispered to her the day before he died: Nothing accomplished. He was in the hospital then, sad and confused and silent. Now and then he'd asked his daughter to write things down for him, in the first person, to help him.
